CAMDEN EAST.

The social gathering in the Methodist church, on Friday evening last, of members of the congregation from Newburgh, Wesley, Strathcona and Camden East, was largely attended. The Camden East people provided refreshments and the other places furnished the programme, an interesting feature being a debate on the subject whether or not our grandfathers had more pleasure than the young people of to-day. Much credit is to be given all who took part in the programme. The audience enjoyed both programme and refreshments. A nice sum was realized for church purposes.

The W. M. S. held its annual Easter meeting on Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. L. H. Stover.

TO THE EDITOR.

Enterprise, March 19, 1923.

Editor Napanee Express:

Dear Sir—Kindly allow me space in your valuable paper for the following:

A careful perusal of the address given at the Ontario Educational Association Convention in Toronto reveals three objections, the eliminating of rural trustees, the lady teacher and the one-room school.

Note questions No. 2 for discussion at the convention this Easter. "How shall more matured, experienced and permanent teachers be secured for rural schools."

The School Journal says: "At present the great majority of rural schools are manned by women." It also states: "It is no disparagement whatsoever to the worth of these lady teachers to say many of them would be more successful if they were placed under the guidance of an experienced male pupil."

The undercurrent of the "subsidized propaganda" is scrap (1) trustees, (2) lady teachers and (3) the schoolhouse in the rural district.

Yours truly,
H. M. JACKSON.

WILL GRADUATE THIS YEAR

President University Women's Students Council. Entering Vic with the class of '22, Miss Metzler was forced to skip a year during her course and is now graduating with '23. Her home is in Napanee, and she received her education in Albert College, Belleville, and Napanee Collegiate. Since coming to University she has shown great ability as a student and as an executive head, and in addition is one of the most popular girls in the College. While W.U.A. claims a great deal of her thought and time, she also lends material aid to Choral Club, Lit. and S.C.A., and to any one needing secretarial aid and advice. Graduating this year, she will be very much missed around Vic, and from the University Women's Students Council.

It is a conservative statement to say that "everyone in the University knows R. A. Williams." Probably no one knows just what the A. stands for, except R. A. himself and the minister who baptized him. The "R" means "Russ," and as "Russ" he is known to all and sundry around R.C.D.S. and Wilton. The name conjures up a memory of a clean-shaven person. Of medium hight always neatly dressed, pink cheeked, slightly over-sweet-natured build, always in a hurry, usually breathless and accompanied by a black cane and a smile, and always enveloped in an effervescing halo of enthusiasm. Russ has had a varied past. That he is a Dominion Canadian is one can question. He was born in Toronto on July 19, 1894, of U. E. Loyalist stock, the 14th generation under British rule. His elementary education was acquired in the States, Alberta, Toronto (at Malvern and Collegiate), and finally ended when he matriculated from Napanee Collegiate Institute in 1910. On the fall of 1914 he was listed as a "buck" in the 4th Field Ambulance. In December of that year he was in the Artillery and when the Armistice came in 1918 he had run the gauntlet from a "cranker" to a captain, having acquired one casualty en route—a demobilized foot, found, him in various corners of the war devastated area, but by December, 1919, he had returned to his home town and enrolled at the Royal College of Dental Surgeons. This year he graduates, leaving behind him a record of deeds accomplished that sound like the duty roster of an entire class. He has been prominent in Dental swimming, track and harrier events, both as competitor and executive. Has competed on both Faculty and Inter-Faculty Champion Rifle teams and held the Intefaculty title for the mile walk. He managed the Varsity Track team and Sophomore Year.—The Varsity.

It may be interesting to some to learn that it is unlawful to fish on Sunday, but the law it appears is somewhat of a dead letter. Answering a correspondent, The Toronto Globe says: "The Lord's Day Act does not interfere with those who angle on Sunday for their own pleasure, but there is a law, passed by the parliament of the province of Canada in 1845, which says: 'It is not lawful for any person on the day to go out fishing, or to take, kill or destroy any fish or to use any gun, fishing rod, net, or other engine for that purpose.' The Ontario authorities say, however, that it is not the duty of fish inspection to enforce this act of 1845. If they should by information under it they would be acting simply as citizens of the province and not as government officials. So it is unlikely that Sunday fishing will be interfered with by officials, though any resident who is anxious that all laws on the statute books be strictly enforced may lay an information on specific cases."

The death of Mrs. Woodcock was the result of injuries sustained by a fall down the cellar of her home last fall.

At the last meeting of the Town Council, Councillor Oscar Fitchett was elected as acting Mayor to serve till the Mayor John Dalton's successor is nominated and elected.

Calgary Albertan:—Whatever may be said of the proportional representation system—and some declare that changed hands—it stands it—there can be no serious question of the wisdom of the preference ballot. In these days when more than two candidates are running in most constituencies, the contest under the present form of voting is frequently a matter of luck and the candidate elected is not the choice of the majority of the people. Let us have P. R. in the cities and the preference ballot in the one-membered constituencies.

GRACE CHURCH REVIVAL

HANLEY & FISHER, NOTED EVANGELISTS, WILL BEGIN A FOUR-WEEK CAMPAIGN STARTING TUESDAY NIGHT, APRIL THIRD.

What promises to be one of the largest revivals in Napanee in recent years will be ushered in in Napanee at Grace Methodist Church, when the noted evangelists, Hanley & Fisher, will launch a four-weeks' campaign, coming direct to Napanee from Waterloo, Iowa.

The names of Hanley & Fisher are familiar to many people throughout Canada and the United States, and their work is accomplished by applying simple gospel truths in a dignified inspiring manner.

For over fifty years Grace Church, at intervals, has held many revivals, and it is the intention of this congregation, through the leadership of its pastor, Rev. A. J. Terrill, to prepare the way influenced to make this series of services one of its outstanding achievements. The first service will be held Tuesday evening, April 3rd, at 7.30, and services will be held every evening throughout the week. Monday evening, April 9th, and the first Sunday afternoon meeting will be for women only.

Rev. Major Joe R. Hanley, more familiarly known as plain "Joe" Hanley, is a lawyer, lecturer, evangelist and chaplain, a citizen of Muscatine, Iowa, and a graduate of Iowa State University. Having spent some time in France during the war fighting the Germans, the major returned to the evangelistic field, in which he has labored for nearly seven years, and comes with a richer and wider experience and a deeper sympathy and love for all mankind. Mr. Hanley is a preacher of marked power. He is somewhat spectacular in his methods, but all he says and does is clean and wholesome. A sunshiny optimism prevades his work and not a dull moment intervenes.

Smacking with the renowned "saw-dust trail" of Billy Sunday, which many thousands travelled in the canvas tabernacles in days gone by, comes Fred G. Fisher, who, for ten years, worked with Billy Sunday as a chorister and soloist, and for seven years has been with Mr. Hanley. Having studied with some of the foremost musical instructors, Mr. Fisher possesses excellent ability to lead congregational singing, is a capable soloist and interpreter of gospel singing.

So great has been the preparation by the officials of the church and so keen is the enthusiasm of the congregation that enormous accommodation of Grace Church will be taxed to the utmost to comfortably seat all the people.

The Passing Show of 1923.

Owing to numerous requests for a repeat performance both from those who saw the production of the play, "Fairies and from those who were unable to attend, it has been decided to repeat it again on the 24th and 25th of April. This pretty little play, however, will be only one item on the new program which has been arranged under the name of "The Passing Show of 1923." Mr. Sheard and Mr. Shean will once again hold forth in song and will air new topics of public interest. There will be several dances on the program in addition to those in the play and the originality of the costumes is surpassed only by that of the dances themselves. The scenery and the lighting methods used during several of these dances is new to any Napanee stage and gives a particularly beautiful effect. A short vaudeville curtain act has been written for two local stars whose merit deserves to be credited to any bill at a Toronto theatre. The final act or number of "The Passing Show of 1923" is a complete three-act play in a condensed form and is a burlesque on Modern New York. It has been written specially for the local players who take the parts and their performance of this play alone would constitute an evening's entertainment.

"Be ye doers of the word and not hearers only", Jas. 1-22; "They that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing," Ps. 34-10; "Come and walking unto the Lord because he hath dealt bountifully with me," Ps. 13-6; The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost," Luke 19-10; "My God shall supply all your need, according to His riches in glory by Christ Jesus," Phil. 4-19; "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life," Rev. 2-10.

He keeps me from all want and ill, With loving eye, He guides me still,
His peace and joy my spirit fill.
O loving seeker of the lost,
How great for me Thy toil and cost.

The Governor and the Bishop.

The island of Saint Lucia in the West Indies used to be remarkable for its nigh death rate. The place was unwholesome and depressing; a visitor was pretty sure to become homesick sooner or later, if not at once. In "The Cradle of the Deep" Sir Frederick Treves tells an amusing story of an English governor of a century ago, who was noted for his parsimony. It seems that one day the bishop of the diocese landed at Castries in the course of his tour. Etiquette required that the governor should offer him the hospitalities of the Government House during his stay. After the bishop had had his first meal the governor showed him round the house and did the honors in this fashion—"This, my dear bishop, is the best bedroom. It was here that my predecessor died of yellow fever. You will remember him, a most genial man. Look out for this step in the passage. We found it a very awkward corner for a coffin. This next room has a charming view of the sea; the bedstead is a fine specimen of Creole work. Poor old Col. Smithson had his worst fit on that bed; it took two men to hold him; poor, dear man, he has been paralyzed now for three years! This third bedroom we call the red-room. I hope you admire the curtains; they came from England. It was here that poor Morris, my secretary, died. He seems to have got typhoid fever in the house, although we are most careful. Now you must come upstairs and see the blue room and the fine outlook over the town. Major Jones died on this bed while he was paying us a visit." The bishop had heard quite enough. He ordered his horse and rode off into the town, determined to find a more salubrious, even if less magnificent, shelter.

A POULTRY LETTER

Dear members of the Napanee Poultry Association :

I have been requested by our worthy representative, Mr. Main, to write a paper on poultry. This is something very new to me, so it will be necessary to make allowances. I may say I have not had a very wide experience in handling poultry, only to the extent of a side line on the farm. I no doubt will tell you many things you already know yourselves and perhaps some new pointers. The old saying is we are never too old to learn, and I think this particularly applies to poultry.

There are many excellent ways of carrying along the poultry business with regard to feed, care, breeding and general management. Where one makes a success one way another with a quite different way will have equal success. There are no hard or fast rules with regard to poultry keeping, still we must admit there are certain principles that go to make the poultry business a success. One of the first things we must have is good foundation stock from any of the popular breeds. With regard to breeds it is all a matter of choice. If one prefers a special breed for eggs only, we know it is hard to beat the White Leghorn. This is the popular variety on commercial plants. For the farm the general purpose breeds are the most popular, the Rocks, White Wyandottes, Rhode Island Reds and the Buff Orpingtons, with a tendency to favor the Barred Rocks.

Any breed is good if the right strain is kept. We must have in view vitality as well as production.

I firmly believe in a breeding pen, apart from the laying flock. This pen should be selected with care, preferably from two-year-old hens that have produced well when pullets. As soon as the heavy laying season is over, which is usually the end of June, the flock should be culled. Expert poultrymen have brought to light in the last few years the fact that there is such a thing as an egg type in hens, and this is the best season of the year to identify this type.

The first point to remember is that the weakling will in no way be worth while keeping in the flock. Consequently all birds with physical defects, such as crooked beak, excessively long toe-nails, scaly legs or other similar defects, should be discarded. The heavy layer must be sound in body and be vigorous and healthy. In the process of laying the yellow skinned varieties bleach out to white, so that this is very important when culling. A bird that has been a heavy producer will lose her yellow color in the order mentioned, vent, eye-ring, beak and lastly the shanks. The shanks are the slowest to bleach out, and a bleached out shank usually indicates a fairly heavy production for a period of at least fifteen or twenty weeks. In addition to color changes the heavy layer must have capacity. That is, she must have width and depth to allow her to consume large quantities of grain and digest it properly. The quality of the skin and thickness and stiffness of the pelvic bones are also indications of egg laying. Where the pin bones are thin and pliable the indications for egg laying are greater, and where the skin is soft and velvety, particularly between the pin bones and keel bone there is no doubt that such a bird is not her feed to good account. The appearance of the head is a valuable indication of a good hen, since the head points to the vigor of the bird. If the head is fine, the face clean-cut with a full, round and prominent eye, and the beak short and slightly curved, the vigor of the bird is good. There are other points that go to show the vigorous, high producing hen, but the above mentioned are the most important. We know that to produce a profitable flock of pullets we must start with a good, vigorous pullet reared by a male bird from a high producing hen.

The care of the breeding pen is another important point. We cannot get healthy, vigorous chickens from hens that have been forced for winter egg production, hence the breeding pen must be wintered with just enough feed to keep them healthy. On fine days they may run in an open shed or if the weather is moderate on the barnyard. A little green feed should be given occasionally, but no animal food should be fed as this has a tendency to lower the fertility of the eggs. The male birds are much better kept by themselves of possible, till the breeding season.

As far as hatching chickens are concerned, it is for the individual breeder to decide whether to use the natural or artificial means of incubation. Where one has a back-yard flock, or where a farmer does not expect to raise more than one hundred or one hundred and fifty chickens, it is doubtful if it is wise to invest in an incubator. I hatch all my chickens the natural way and have splendid success. Sometimes it is impossible to get early setters, but where one has a flock that has laid since November, there are usually plenty of early hens that are broody. I have little to say with regard to using incubators, as I have had little experience. There is no doubt this system is alright, as a good many are having success with incubators. The little experience I have had has taught me a dear lesson. I used a neighbor's machine that was old and unreliable and made a failure of it. By all means never buy a second hand machine, as they are not a dependable as the new ones.

There are many good ways of rearing chicks. I have good success with colony houses. These are much better than coops, particularly early in the season, as they afford a dry and warm protection for the chicks. This is important, as we know that a chicken that has been chilled has a small chance of life in this world. Have plenty of fresh air in these houses avoiding drafts. On warm days get the chicks to the ground. The houses and surroundings must be kept clean if we wish health in the flock. This is where the colony house has the advantage as it can be frequently moved to fresh ground.

There are different good methods of feeding. One must be careful of overfeeding when the chicks are small. This applies to poultry of all ages. The successful poultryman must use judgment with regard to feeding. It is important that poultry should have plenty of feed to thrive, but if they are overfed it produces sluggishness. Poultry if in this state for any length of time soon become unhealthy. Exercise is one of the essentials necessary for good health. This exercise cannot be produced if birds are overfed as they will not work unless they have keen appetites. I have had good success feeding Blackford's Chick Mash in hoppers where they may help themselves. Feed a good scratch consisting of finely cracked corn, wheat and rolled oats with a little fine grit added. If chicks are confined to the houses a green feed must be added, consisting of lettuce or boiled grains. There is one thing to be kept in mind rearing chickens and that is, to keep them growing as fast as possible so as to put the pullets on the earliest possible broiler market and to bring the pullets to maturity so that they will well started on winter production by the first of November. The success or failure of winter production depends on the growth and thrift of the pullets.

The pullets should be in their winter quarters not later than October. Keeping the pullets closely confined to the poultry-house all the time is strongly advocated. I cannot agree with this method. We must consider health as well as production. On warm days in October and November the pullets should have free range. This winter I am having splendid success and I allowed the pullets to be out every mild day. I kept them shut in in the morning when the air was cold, letting them out as soon as it turned warm. There is no altitude in birds being out when it is cold and they huddle around together. This tends to set back egg production. The house should be well cleaned before the pullets are put into it. I spray it well with lime and carbolic, fumigate with sulphur, wash the windows and clean out all old litter. Cleanliness is one of the points we cannot be too particular about as on this depends, to a large extent, the health of the poultry. Clean the dropping board every day, spray with a good carbolic solution once a week or ten days, clean out the litter every week if possible and be sure to put clean straw in the nests regularly. This may sound a little too particular but it is not the case. There is more trouble in poultry keeping, with regard to disease, mites and lice, through uncleanliness than any other cause. If we follow these rules, having the house ventilated to avoid drafts, we need little fear disease.

With regard to feeding for winter egg production we must practice regularity if we wish good results. Feed at the same time each day, being sure to go among the fowls quietly all times. A little scare through carlessness easily lessens egg production. No doubt a dry mash before the pullets at all times is alright as there are many having success with this method of feeding. I have success with no mash whatever.

The following is my method : A scratch feed in one foot of litter in the morning, consisting of wheat, oats and barley. Between nine and ten the pullets are given sugar beets or cabbage hung from a wire. At noon they are given corn on the cob, which on cold days is heated by the stove. The dropping board is cleaned off and sprinkled with clover chaff. Then at night they get the same feed as in the morning on the bare floor.

Skim milk is kept before them at all times. They are given salts every ten days in water, 1 pound to 100 hens. They are provided with a good dust bath also. The more one can do to promote exercise the better, as the birds are healthier when kept busy.

With regard to housing, there are many kinds of houses that are giving good results. For the health and comfort of the birds each house must be dry, well ventilated, free from draughts, sunny and cheerful and contain sufficient room for the flock. The building with the straw loft, cotton front and concrete floor fills these requirements very well. In closing I may say that you have heard my ideas of successful poultry keeping. I hope that in some way this paper may be instructive. I do not think that my way is the only way and am glad at any time to receive new pointers that will help to make improvements. I believe very much in your association as the meetings are a good place to exchange ideas and pass along any good information. I now close, wishing the Association very much progress and success.

THE BELL TELEPHONE CO. OF CANADA.

Every Bell Telephone a Long Distance Station

A HYDRO PARADOX

By J. E. Middleton.

Twelve years ago the cost of station at Niagara Falls was $9, electric energy at the generating and the average price to consumers in Toronto was 4.4c. per kilowatt hour. Last year the price at Niagara Falls was $16 and the kilowatt hour rate in Toronto averaged 2c. The paradox is explained by a greatly increased consumption and by the fact that the mere generating of power is only a small proportion of the expenditure necessary to bring the service to the consumer. The revenue collected from customers in any Municipality associated with the co-operative Municipal union known as the Hydro-Electric System must first provide for the capital charges on the local investment, which includes a contribution to Renewals as well as a Sinking Fund instalment. It must also meet the cost of operation and maintenance. (The fact that both Renewals and Maintenance are provided for indicates the extraordinarily conservative basis of the financing.) This done, the Municipality pays to the Provincial Commission a fixed price per horse-power for delivered energy. In Toronto this payment is about one-third of the revenue from consumers. The Provincial Commission takes that money and meets the current and capital charges on the transmission lines and sub-stations as well as the cost of generating the energy. Roughly, about one-half of the sum collected is applied to the cost of generating ; that is, one-half of one-third of the money received by the Municipalities from the consumers. When a customer pays $1 for his monthly lighting service, about 17c. of that dollar is required for the generating of power. Therefore if the generating cost has been increased in 12 years by about 60 per cent, the relation of that increase to the Consumer's Dollar is 60 per cent. of 17c., a shade over 10c.

If there had been no great increase in the power demand of Toronto, operating towards the reduction of unit cost to the consumer, the enlarged expenditures for generating at Niagara would have increased the Consumer's Dollar only by 10c. That is to say he would have paid $1.10 for a monthly service, which under Private Ownership, has an average cost in 80 Canadian and American communities of $2.61.

Those familiar with the comparatively slight impact of generating-cost on the actual bills of the consumer were entertained by the curious contention on the part of critics of the "Hydro" that the extension of the Chippawa-Queenston plant would burden the Municipalities with a crushing load of debt and compel enormous increases in consumers' rates that all the advantage of co-operative municipal ownership would be lost. Time has shown the error of that criticism for although the Chippawa-Queenston plant is in operation and its capital charges are now being collected from month to month, consumer's rates have not been increased.

USE AND VALUE OF MARL.

Marl is of such agricultural importance that Dr. F. T. Shutt, the Dominion Chemist, in his last annual report says that he feels warranted in again calling attention to its value as a cheap and excellent amendment for soils in need of lime. As yet, farmers in Canada have not, he considers, fully realized its worth. In many districts marl is procurable at a minimum of expense, possibly at the cost of digging and hauling—making it by far the cheapest form of lime for agricultural purposes. Marl usually occurs in beds of a few inches to several feet in thickness on old lake bottoms, frequently overlaid by swamp muck or peaty deposit. Some fifty samples were sent in to be examined at the Dominion Experimental Farms' laboratory at Ottawa during the year with which the report deals and the results of the analyses are all given. These samples came from far-away Yukon and nearly all the provinces. An analysis is necessary only to determine the actual composition of any particular sample, as marl can be identified and distinguished by its giving a copious effervescence on the addition of a little strong vinegar or other acid.

When freshly dug, marl is usually a greyish, pasty mass. On drying it becomes lighter in colour, forming lumps which can be easily crushed. As to its application, on light and sandy soils from two to five tons per acre may be applied. On heavy clay loams and mucks, from five to twenty tons is the required amount. No reasonable excess. Dr. Shutt says, is likely to prove harmful. The application may be made in spring or fall, scattering on the ploughed land and harrowing in. Broadcasted in autumn on fields and meadows, the influence of marl is to encourage more particularly the growth of clovers.

THYSSEN OF THE RUHR

HE IS THE STRONG MAN NOW OPPOSING FRANCE.

This Man Resembles Rockefeller In Many Ways—In Spite of Immense Wealth, He Lives Economically—He Is a Strong Roman Catholic, and Has Been Divorced From His Wife.

August Thyssen is the strongest individual that confronts the French in the Ruhr. Until the invasion he was the industrial master of that great region and even to-day has not abdicated. Naturally he is filled with rage and indignation at the actions of the French, but this is only because his own pocket is being hit, not because his sense of justice is revolted. Herr Thyssen indeed went on record publicly as late as 1918 in declaring that no peace should be signed which did not give Germany control of Briey and Nancy, with a belt of land sufficient to safeguard the conquest from French guns—that is to say, at least, thirty miles, and in a word Verdun. He was a rabid annexationist and said once that it was the iron mines of Lorraine that enabled Germany to prolong the war. What France is due to Germany now is not as bad as what Thyssen was anxious that Germany should do to France had the fortunes of war permitted it. It seems to be true that at first Thyssen, like Hallin, the great shipowner, did not approve the war, but he contributed powerfully to carrying it on.

He was opposed to it because his personal interests were international. He had investments in half a dozen foreign countries, as well as important works in France. He saw that they would cut sharply across the credit of war; but he was told, like the other German magnates who were so assiduously cultivated by the kaiser and his chancellor in the years from 1911 to 1914, that his fortunes would be doubled as the result of war. The great captains of industry were to be given concessions in the conquered countries which would make their present wealth appear penury and were quite carried away by the prospect. Yet Thyssen has said, "The war would never have happened if we had had a British shipowner for Ambassador at Berlin and a Rhenish ironmaster for Ambassador at London." A more truthful remark which he refrained from making is that there would have been no war had the German captains of industry united to oppose it because they had been given all the cheapest of bribes, namely, royal promises. If the French were able to squeeze the indemnity out of Thyssen alone there would be little objection in any quarter to their occupation of the Ruhr in pursuance of that aim; but when Thyssen is pinched, fifty thousand families dependent on his industries are hit.

Thyssen has been frequently compared with Rockefeller, though he is to-day more vigorous. Both began to become millionaires about the same time. Rockefeller worked in oil, and Thyssen at first in iron. He found in the Ruhr a district with resources almost unbounded. He had a great vision, but only a little capital. With his $6,000 he built his first rolling mill where sixty men were employed. That has since grown into the Deutsches Kaiser Works, with a pay roll of 26,000 workers. How many men are employed in all his enterprises is not known, but it is said that even to-day in the Ruhr he has 66,000 men working for him. He is an autocrat in industry, and probably a canting hypocrite, for he speaks of loving his men and of keeping up works running for the sole purpose of providing employment. He says that what he has done this at times when he made no profit at all, and he speaks pathetically of carrying burdens and anxieties which often depressed him for years at a time. Like Rockefeller, too, he is religious. He professes to scorn worldly honors, and the only distinctions he has ever accepted were those conferred upon him by the pope, for he is a devout Roman Catholic.

Like Rockefeller again, he is extremely economical in his habits. He wears his clothes until they are worn out. He travels second class and has never given a tip. His automobile he has had since 1909, and it is in startling contrast to the magnificent cars of certain British lieutenants. Indeed, many of the latter spend more upon themselves in a week than their master spends in a year. The point is that he takes no pleasure in good living. His enjoyments come either from religious meditation or from planning great extensions of his business. A stern man, he found that he could not live happily with his wife and they were divorced. Thyssen made an agreement whereby he was to have control of his wealth while he lived, and when it would be divided among his children. One daughter, Anny, began to anticipate his share. He painted Berlin one of the richest reds it had ever withstood, and spent millions of his own and of his father's estate were already in his hands. He issued promissory notes with a promise that eventually redeemed the whole.

He contended that he was entitled to not only his share of his father's estate at once, but the part which was made, and to a share of all subsequent increment. His father disputed this idea, and fought it in the courts. Legal fees to the lawyers engaged were the greatest it is said, ever paid in a case in Berlin. Eventually Thyssen, senior, settled his claim out of the total of about one-fifth of his fortune. How rich he is now nobody can guess. In German marks of course he is a trillionaire, and in good dollars probably would end up for some scores of millions. Yet he continues to work twelve hours a day, and is proud that the eight-hour day would ruin Germany.

Here and There

It is announced that a new cave, the extent of which can only be surmised, has been discovered seven miles from Glacier House, Glacier, B.C.

The Yukon Territory is rapidly losing its inhabitants. In 1911 the population was 27,217, and in 1921 it had dwindled down to 4,157.

In an address to the Rotarians in Montreal last week, E. W. Beatty, president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, made a pointed statement to the effect that Canada needs more capital for its development and more men for the same purpose.

An old-time stampede will be held in Calgary, Alta., between July 5th and July 14th, 1923. The programme will, as usual, include calf roping contests, broncho busting, and fancy riding and roping, etc.

Resumption of direct steamship service this spring between Montreal and the principal Norwegian ports, with the object of furthering the expansion of trade between Canada and Norway, is announced by the Canadian Pacific traffic agents for the Norwegian-American Line.

The Canadian Pacific steamship "Metagama" recently brought over to Canada 400 men and women of the Outer Hebrides—the first migration of young Hebrines farmers to Canada under the Ontario immigration scheme.

A bill has been introduced into the Chamber of Deputies, Paris, authorizing the Government to expend 2,750,000 francs on the Canadian travelling exhibition. At least thirty French towns will be visited by the train this summer.

As guests of President Beatty of the Canadian Pacific Railway, four boy members of the young farmers clubs of Great Britain will cross the Atlantic and tour the Eastern and Western provinces of Canada.

Canada's exports to the United Kingdom in 1922 were more than $34,000,000 higher in value than exports of Canadian goods to the United States. As the United Kingdom, Canada sold goods to the value of $374,751,894, and to the United States $340,156,247.

Before the war India imported $600,000,000 worth of commodities a year, of which Canada sent not more than $30,000 worth. Last year her imports were $800,000,000, of which Canada sent $9,000,000, and it is now expected that there will be a further increase to between $9,000,000 and $5,000,000 this year.

The Canadian Pacific Railway has arranged with a number of European countries for the transfer of farmers and domestics who are willing to come to Canada for employment on Canadian farms. The immigrants will be brought to Canada at the joint expense of their home governments and the railway company.

The first successful radio experiment on a moving long-distance railway train was recently carried out on a Canadian Pacific Railway train from Winnipeg to Vancouver. Mr. Raymond Wyle installed a receiving set in the drawing room of the through sleeping car, and the aerial was installed by the railway electrical department. The results were all that could be desired.

Seeing the train swaying as it passed her while she was picking berries was the reason why Mrs. Fred Mueller of Brantner, Ont., would not take a ride on a train, but after she had returned to West Monkton from Elmira she told W. C. Gowan, the Canadian Pacific agent at the former station that she thoroughly enjoyed the sensation of travelling for the first time on a train, which did not go fast enough for her.

SAILOR "SHANTIES."

Many of Them Still Longer In Eastern Canada.

The palmy days of sailing ships when sailors sang as they hauled at the ropes or worked at the windlass were recalled by Sir Walter Allen Ashbridge at a recent meeting of the Northumberland and Durham Association in London. Sir Walter is head of a great shipping firm in Newcastle-on-Tyne, and has written "Windjammers and Sea Tramps," and other stories of the sea, and he entertained the association by singing some of the old sailor shanties.

These shanties aroused pleasant memories in Sir Richard Cory, organist of Westminster Cathedral. He protested vigorously against calling this kind of sailor song a "shanty" to rhyme with "Dandy." and declared that the "literary precosity" showed colossal ignorance. "Like Sir Walter," he said, "I was during childhood and youth constantly among ships; and I had learnt first hand all the popular shanties before they ever appeared in print. My maternal ancestors followed the sea, and I had as the family history can be traced. Also, I lived for some years in the West Indies, one of the few places where shanties may still be heard."

If Sir Richard had lived in Nova Scotia he might have added that the palmy days of the prosperous days of wooden shipbuilding. Some of these were found by W. Roy MacKenzie, professor of English in Acadia University, when he returned to his native village of River John with the "Quest of the Ballad." A picturesque character of the village was an old sailor named Dick Hinds, who announced one day: "Here's a mainsl shanty that I used to sing for the crew when we was gittin' squared away for sea":

One evening as I rambled down by the Clarence dock,
Heave away, my Johnnies, heave away,
I overhead an Irish girl conversin' with Tep Scott,
And heave away, my Johnnies, we're all away to sea.

And so on, no doubt, until all the sails were set. As it still lingered in the veteran's mind it was probably considered a fine thing in its day, but times and tastes have changed. Prof. MacKenzie laments the disappearance of "shanties," "Comb-all-ye's," and other kinds of country ballad, which have given way to more modern music and entertainment, but which have their value as preservatives of folk-lore and ancient traditions.

Head Steamships On Atlantic and Pacific Oceans

Walter Maughan Fills New Post Made Necessary by Growth of the Canadian Pacific Steamship Business

Walter Maughan, newly appointed Steamship Passenger Manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

THE appointment of Mr. Walter Maughan as Steamship Passenger Manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway has been officially announced at the Company's headquarters. The appointment includes the managership of the Company's passenger business on both the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. Mr. Maughan was born in Toronto in 1876, and joined the Canadian Pacific forces in 1892. In 1897 he was made City Passenger Agent at Toronto, and in 1913 District Passenger Agent. In the same year he was moved to Montreal as Assistant General Passenger Agent, and in December, 1922, became Assistant to the General Passenger Traffic Manager. He has risen to his present high position by outstanding ability as much as by long service.

During the war Mr. Maughan did valuable work as Chairman of the Demobilization Committee of the Canadian Railway War Board representing the Minister of Militia, and was made a Lieutenant-Colonel in recognition of his work in transporting troops from Canada and China to France.

Mr. Maughan's appointment results from recent remarkable growth of the Canadian Pacific Steamship fleets on both oceans, and those especially equipped for West Indies, Mediterranean and around the world cruises that are planned.

At present a regular service on the Atlantic Ocean between St. John, N.B. (winter season) and Montreal and Quebec (summer season) and Southampton, Liverpool, Belfast, Glasgow, Cherbourg, Antwerp, and Hamburg the Canadian Pacific have eighteen passenger steamships with an aggregate displacement tonnage of 360,800 tons. During the coming summer season the Company will have nine passenger steamship sailings from Montreal and Quebec. These exclusive of the fleet of freight steamships.

In the Pacific trade four of the largest and fastest ships on the Pacific Ocean operate between Vancouver and Victoria and Japan and China.

In the year 1924 the Canadian Pacific will operate their own cruises to the West Indies, Mediterranean, Egypt, the Holy Land, and also around the world. Three of their finest oil burning ships have been allotted to these services.

One result of these cruises is that the great Canadian Company not only bridges two oceans and links four continents but actually encircles the globe with its own ships and railways without being dependent on any other transportation agencies.

Place Names Changed.

Canadian National Railway Company has given a year's notice to the Canadian Northern Railway Company that it proposes considering, the former Canadian Northern in connection with the former National Transcontinental in Northern Ontario, and the section called "Lobo-nel" is given as the name of one terminus of the cut-off. This is the French form of Long Lake, and applies to the new unofficial spelling. It is has been authorized by the postal officials at Ottawa it looks like a change in name and importance. A short cut water in Algoma district has long been known and marked on maps as Long Lake, and the only change is an interposition for a name that has been well established.

Such unjustified changes are not new. Lord Dufferin pointed out once as the result of one of his journeys, Rainy River is a translation of the French name "Lac la Pluie," which is itself erroneous, because the original name was that of the French discoverer, whose name happened to be Riviere. A more glaring case is that of "Bird-tail" Creek in Manitoba, now contracted into "Birtle," while the original Bird-tail has been given to another place often miles away in the same province.

Pensions From War of 1812.

WASHINGTON, March 19. — The fact that women live longer than men is proved especially by the Government of the Interior, which announces that the Government of the United States is still paying pensions to 41 widows of soldiers of the War of 1812, notwithstanding the fact that 108 years have elapsed since the close of the conflict. Hiram Cronk, of Ava, N.Y., was the last veteran of the second war with Great Britain. He died in 1905 at the age of 105 years. No other soldier is known that the war of 1812 closed 108 years ago, the oldest widow still drawing a pension is Mahala Huff, Louisa, Ky., who modestly admits only 104 years. Matelda Showacre, Cobb, Ky., admits 102 years, while Eliza A. Pate, Annapolis, Md., is 100 years old. All the rest are under the century mark.

Discoverers of This Continent

Prof. J. P. Harrington, ethnologist of the Smithsonian Institute, has marshalled a formidable list of arguments to prove his theory that this continent was discovered by Indians long before the time of Columbus. He fixes the time of their first arrival at 20,000 years ago, and says that they came over from Siberia. Like Columbus, they did not know what they had discovered. Probably they did not know that they had discovered anything. They simply found a land where game was plentiful and where the struggle for existence was easier than it was in Asia, and so they spread all over North and South America. About the only weakness that presents itself when we look over the statement of Prof. Harrington is the assumed fact that there never floated back to Asia any news of what the pioneers had found, or a migration of so many thousands it seems incredible that no traveler returned to tell of the wonders that had been. However, even if he had done so the Asiatic forefathers of the Indians had no literature, and it is probable that the only record or return visit would have been in some legend.

One of the strongest arguments in favor of the theory that the original settlers of this continent came over from Siberia by way of Alaska is the undoubted fact that such passage was quite possible. For a long stretch of the Siberian coast, the shore and mountains of Alaska are in plain sight across Behring Straits, at one place is only 40 miles wide. It is obvious, therefore, that as a matter of seeing alone, this continent was discovered as soon as there were any inhabitants in Siberia. Moreover, the passage is broken by the two small Diomede Islands. Sometimes this strip of water freezes over and a crossing on foot would be quite feasible even if the Siberians were not venturesome enough to put off in boats, and it is known that they had boats from the earliest time. It is easier to believe that to disbelieve that these Siberian tribes which were nomadic would make an effort to explore the country lying so close to them, especially since Siberia must have left much to be desired as a permanent home.

Prof. Harrington believes that the discoveries of America took this route and no other. The fact that the Kommandorsky Islands, the westernmost of the Aleutian chain which stretches from Kamchatka to Alaska, were uninhabited when discovered by modern man, as was Iceland, discounts the theory that either the Aleutian chain or Iceland was used. The professor sees no reason to accept the theory that the discoverers came by long jumps across the Pacific. There is no reason to suppose that they guessed the presence of land to the west. These ignorant pioneers must have seen something before venturing forth. He dismisses the theory of the lost continent of Atlantis as a myth, since no relics of Atlantis culture have ever been dredged up from the Atlantic Ocean. Having crossed to Alaska it was natural that the Indians should travel south, since this was the more inviting prospect. The fact that they were always more numerous in the west than in the east is further substantiation of the theory of a discovery from Asia.

Prof. Harrington says that in the west and in Mexico, Central America and Peru their culture reached its apex. In support of his theory that the discoverers of America were all of one kind, he cites their physical characteristics, the widespread occurrence of customs and myths found in all tribes and the use a special study of their language, which he made with the Kiowa-Apache, an instrument for recording most delicate nuances of sound. The Kiowa is a unity in all the Indian languages, he finds, which are as a mother tongue for all, and he explains the time of the Asiatic exodus at 20,000 years, because in that time there would have certainly arisen the divergence which are found in the various dialects.

Sponsor of all Prof. Harrington's arguments, however, is the fact for which he reasons that there are in the to-day, tribes which resemble in every respect certain Indian tribes. So close is this similarity that were one of these natives stripped and ghastly beside an American Indian, no scientist could tell by the most delicate measurements or other characteristics which was which. Another theory held by some ethnologists is that the Americans were Europeans who acquired their black and swarthy skins after arriving on this continent. A still later theory advanced by Dr. Roland B. Dixon, professor of anthropology of Harvard, is that this continent was populated by four great immigrations; two from Europe, and two from Asia. He comes to this conclusion because he finds the native Indians of North and South America fall into four classes. He agrees with Prof. Harrington, however, that certainly the invasion came by way of Behring Strait.

The Croupy Child.

If your child has a tendency towards croupy during the winter, try the following remedy, which, if it does not entirely prevent an attack, will certainly mitigate its severity. Spread a piece of brown paper (enough to cover the child's chest) with pig's fat or mutton, sprinkle with a little sulphur, and wear over chest and at the base of the throat.

The ostrich, the biggest bird in the world, has proportionately the smallest brain.

Alone, But Well Protected

A group of little girls who came some from England to Canada, and "Buddy" a dog traveller on the way from Boston to Manilla.

TO lead a dog's life might not, on occasion, be as bad as the old adage infers; indeed, it might mean to lead a life of luxurious comfort and to be free of many of the trials and troubles that human flesh is heir to. Take "Buddy" for instance. He is a fox terrier who entered this life within the confines of the Boston Kennels, and as long as he remained a member of the colony he received all the care and attention that his canine heart could desire. Being a well-behaved puppy he was allowed to reach the age when those of his species no longer feeling the need of a protecting hand, attach themselves to a master and endeavor to protect him from the dangers of the day and night. Time came when his desire for his own man was to be gratified and his owners having been paid for his frivolous whim, he was placed in a crate and sent, "Canadian Pacific all the way," from Boston to Manila.

True, all the joys of travel were not his, but while on the train, his kennel was kept in an airy part of the baggage car, and on some glorious occasions when the train stopped long enough he was given a run in a strange and fascinating city. At length he was taken aboard the Canadian Pacific "Empress of Asia," and he at once won over the hearts of those of the passengers privileged to meet him. In addition to the considerable notice from the passengers, "Buddy" received proper attention from the employees of the company, and tacked to the side of his crate were instructions as to feeding, which were religiously followed. Besides stating meal hours "Buddy" informed the world that:

"I am a young and affectionate puppy.
"I am a true friend to anyone who is kind to me.
"I am lonesome and sensitive, but very appreciative of kindness, and I wish kind everybody to me, to feed me, to give me some water and to take me out of my crate so that I can keep clean.
"I am an Airedale terrior and my name is Buddy.
"I certainly thank you for your kindness as I am on a long trip —from Boston to Manila."

Another passenger on the "Empress of Asia," when she last sailed from Victoria, was little Annette Bradshaw, who was making the long trip across the Pacific for the purpose of joining her parents, Adjutant and Mrs. J. Swanson, who are engaged on the missionary work of the Salvation Army at Kobe, Japan. Throughout the voyage Annette was the special charge of Purser John Moir, who has, on more than one previous occasion, seen that young people safely delivered to their waiting parents and friends. The little voyager soon made friends with other of the ship's passengers, with the result that she was very glad to see her parents again she found one journey far too short for her liking. Every opportunity of sending a child on such a long journey alone would not have been entertained for a moment by its guardians, but the youngsters who travel around the world in perfect safety alone, and many particularly European settlers, find it very comforting to first make sure of their position and standing after immigrating, and then have their children brought to them. In addition to the care shown them by, and under the direct protection of, the Canadian Pacific. On her last voyage the "Montcalm" brought six children from the old world to friends on this side. These children represented three families and their ages ranged from a baby girl who was under the care of her fifteen year old brother. Two other children were "Men of the World" at seven and eight years, and were going still further west. The others were placed in landing cards in the care of a lady going directly to their destination who was very much interested in the arrangements having made to safeguard the children, and who made to safeguard the opportunity to gladly accepted the opportunity to help along a good work.

Genius of Lord Tennyson Eclipsed His Brothers, Who Were Minor Poets

To the world at large the name Tennyson means Alfred Tennyson, but it is likely to be surprised that there were three Tennyson brothers, Alfred, Charles and Frederick, all of whom drew from their common inheritance the gift of poesy. The two last named are quite overshadowed by the fame of Alfred, and Frederick is least known of the three—but there is at least one production of his for which he should be remembered. This is his "Skylark"—some years ago it was reprinted in an American periodical, with the signature "Tennyson" attached, but with no further clew. As widely read a man as Henry Van Dyke when asked about it did not recognize it, but on being referred to James Whitcomb Riley and was new to him, and many others who were questioned were equally ignorant. Quite recently, in this regard to the, being sent him, it interesting as showing his critical acumen. It read:

"If Mr. Alfred Tennyson] is certainly a poet, but not one that Alfred Tennyson could write. But for Shelley's skylark there would never have been written anything which could even approach it in the same genre, and it's really found and established to society indeed it would be somewhat an anomaly in literature if the supreme world as compared with the divine inspiration of one of the Poet's creatures. Only a master of a master's craft, might it be the work of a Tennyson—either in any of his moods."

It is obvious at once that the poem in its conception does not show the originality of the lowest poet. But in the absence of any clue to identify the expression so suggest him that one might be justified in thinking that he had, in an idle mood, taken the theme of Shelley's lyric upon it simply to try his own powers as an experiment. This is probably what Frederick did, and he was credited with having rather a dilettante. It was one which he was primarily for the simple pleasure of self-expression. This "skylark" with its poetic power borrows interest when set beside Shelley's famous poem at least to one who likes to make a study of the creative process. It follows:

How the blithe lark runs up the golden stair
That leans through cloudy gates
Of heaven, and sings!
And all unseen in the empyrean air
Fills it with floods of melody
of mirth;
How far he soars, how far
With the light upon his wings,
Is it a bird, or star
That sings and soars?

What matter if he may be dark and form,
That sunbeam tells of other days
to be,
And singing in the light that floods
him o'er
In joy he overtakes Futurity;
Under those golden gates
He peeps, and sees behind
Years rushing, rushing fast
Adown the wind.

And now he dives into a rainbow's rivers,
Wherein of gold and purple he is drowned;
Strife, the arrows of his song he shivers
As they the stormy drops were turned to sound.
And now he leaves thro',
He sees the world below;
Faintly like falling dew,
His fast notes shower.

Yet every wind be hushed, that I may hear
The wondrous things he tells the World below,
Things that no dream of, he is watching near;
Hopes that we never dream'd he would bring,
Alas! the storm hath rolled
Back the cold gates again,
Or earth of me had told
All Heaven to men!

So the victorious poet sings alone,
And fills with light his solitary
home,
And thro' that glory sees new worlds
—foreshown,
And hears main songs, and triumphs
Yet is he human,
He waves the air of Time
With shells of mortal chords,
And makes the world to climb
On linked words.

What if his hair be gray, his eyes be dim

If wealth forsake him and if friends be cold
Wonder under her thousand gates to him,
Truth never fails, nor beauty wasteth old.
Music hath he tells his eyes
Behold the spirit hears,
Age clad and girt in gladness
Twixt joy and tears.

Blest is the man who with the sound of song
Can drive away the heartache and forget
The cares of the present and the aches of Wrong,
And gather to the fatal whispers of Regret
Darker are the shades
Of the years he reaches
While Passion's rose that blushed
Is now a withered thing.

What Bloodhounds Can Do.

Bloodhounds are interested not in attacking a fugitive, but only in following his trail. The ability of a bloodhound to follow even an old trail, we learn from Mr. Samuel A. Derieux, the American Magazine, is truly remarkable. Fifty hours after the robbery of a mail train at Casper, Wyoming, two blood-hounds were put on the trail of the thief, and at once led the officers into the desert. During the night he ran the dogs did not hesitate a moment, and finally reached the criminal, who surrendered without resisting. The trail was easy, but on the other hand we have many times followed it. For that reason this incident may seem even more remarkable than the one just narrated. In Nebraska a man was convicted by bloodhounds. Twelve hours after the attempt two bloodhounds were put on his trail; they followed it almost twenty miles in a town that was holding a fair. The streets were crowded, and people, thinking no doubt that the hounds were a part of the entertainment, stepped to watch them. Suddenly the dogs turned, nuzzled their way through the crowd, and with wagging tails stopped in front of a certain man. The fellow was amazed and indignant when the officers told him that he was under arrest, but six hours later he confessed the crime.

Mrs. Lewin Says It's Worth $1,000

Values Tanlac Highly, Declaring It Ended Indigestion, Soothed Nerves and Restored Weight.

"I wouldn't take a thousand dollars for the good Tanlac has done me, for I would have given that much before I took this wonderful treatment to feel the way I do now," was the positive statement made the other day by Mrs. Matilda Lewin, 12 Strange St., Toronto, Ont.

"I suffered with stomach trouble, general run-down condition, and my nerves were so excited that they nearly drove me wild. I ate scarcely enough to keep going, was dreadfully thin and weak, and often had to give up my housework to avoid a breakdown. Gas on my stomach bloated me till I could hardly breathe, I had to rush to the window for air, and seldom got a good night's sleep.

"If I live to be a hundred years old, I will always bless the day I started the Tanlac treatment. I have gained nine pounds, am free of indigestion, nervousness and sleeplessness, and my housework is like play. Tanlac is simply grand."

Hay Bay as a Game and Fish Preserve.

It is reported to us that Mr. D. McDonald, Deputy Minister of the Department of Game and Fisheries, is laying before the Drury Cabinet a scheme for the establishment in Central Ontario, under regulations of the Department, at some suitable point, of a Crown Game and Fish Preserve. Why not Hay Bay ? No more convenient place could be found for depositing the stock from the Government Hatcheries at Glenora, and the marsh lands of the Bay cannot be improved upon as a resort for ducks and other game wild fowl. We are told it would not interfere with trappers of muskrats properly licensed and observing the statutory laws relating thereto, in fact it would ultimately result in benefitting legitimate trappers, as the Government would then more directly take interest in seeing that the laws were properly observed and certain owners of property adjoining the marshes would be forced to cease their claims to the marsh lands. Come on with the Game Preserve, sports will welcome it. Let us hear from residents on Hay Bay shores.

PLOT AGAINST PUBLIC

Deliberate Attempt to Increase Price of Sugar.

Producers and Wealthy Gamblers Are Alleged to Be Manipulating to Secure a Figure of 20 Cents Per Pound — Canadians May Be Affected by the "Bullish Effort."

WASHINGTON, March 26.—When the price of sugar began to jump in this country a few weeks ago, leaping from seven to ten and eleven cents a pound retail, there was an immediate undercurrent of agitation, which led to many charges and counter-charges regarding the cause, and which has now developed into a general demand for all sorts of official investigations and efforts to prevent a predicted rise in price to 20 cents a pound.

One of the questions being asked by the People's Legislative Service is: Was the real purpose of a conference held last summer of American beet sugar interests and the Cuban producers for the purpose of inducing limitation of the Cuban crop?

It is charged that an attempt was made to limit the Cuban crop to 2,500,000 tons, while the United States requires 4,000,000 tons, the purpose being to create a shortage and greatly increase the price of American producers.

Senator Smoot (Republican, Utah), it is charged, was interested in this conference, as was also Gen. Crowder, the President's official representative in Cuba. When the plan failed, it is declared, Senator Smoot insisted upon and procured from Congress an increase in the duty on sugar imports.

Canadians, and especially Canadian housewives, have a direct pecuniary interest in the agitation which is being waged in the United States by the People's Legislative Service in an effort to get sugar prices brought down to normal, and to punish those whom it declares have brought about this price increase by artificial means. The pocketbook interest of Canadians is touched by the fact that they, too, use sugar in Canada travels up and down in close sympathy with the United States price.

Men in close touch with the sugar market and industry agreed that if the speculators and manipulators in the United States succeed in driving the price up to 20 cents a pound, as it has been alleged they are determined to do, people here would have to shear approximately the same price increase. Asked if there was any possibility of sugar prices coming down ere the canning season opens, they refused to make a definite statement.

Falling Ice Kills Woman.

MONTREAL, March 26.—Struck by a heavy piece of falling ice and snow, Exilina Aubin, aged 52, of Ontario street, east, was knocked unconscious Friday and three hours later died in the General Hospital. She was standing in the yard of her residence at the time and had been warned of her danger a few moments previous to the accident.

Faces Charges of Fraud.

WINNIPEG, Man., March 26.—Arthur Hind, former assistant manager and special agent for the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, on Saturday faced 46 charges of fraud, when he appeared in the police court. He is alleged to have collected illegal commissions on fake insurance policies. He was remanded one week without plea.

Killed Jumping from Train.

BELLEVILLE, Ont., March 26.—An inquest was held at Campbellcroft, North Hastings, on Friday, on the body of Norman Sweet, aged nine years, who jumped from a moving train at Baptiste and was killed.

Young Sweet was a passenger on an I. B. & O. train and jumped off the train at Baptiste before it stopped. He was dragged under the wheels and instantly killed. The jury returned a verdict of accidental death.

Found Dead In Chair.

NEWMARKET, Ont., March 26.—James C. Brody of Newmarket was found dead in his house on Saturday morning by neighbors. Mr. Brody had left his place of business the previous evening in his usual health. When he failed to put in an appearance the next morning, his partner, W. A. Brunton, became anxious, and telephoned to a neighbor, Mr. Brody's, who went to call him and found him dead in a chair, with an evening paper beside him, and the light burning.

Mr. Brody was born in Newmarket 62 years ago, and had lived here all his life. For some years he conducted a general store in partnership with his brother-in-law. Disposing of the business, he became associated in business with W. A. Brunton. Mr. Brody was an enthusiastic sportsman. In his youth he had been a lacrosse player of considerable note, and in later years took up lawn bowling.

Celebration In Greece.

ATHENS, March 26.—Greece yesterday celebrated the 102nd anniversary of her independence. The service in the cathedral was attended by King George and Queen Elizabeth, government officials and foreign diplomats. It was the youthful queen's first public appearance since her recent long illness from typhoid-pneumonia. In the state carriage with King George rode a young naval cadet, whose identity was generally unknown, and whose presence in the seat of honor opposite the monarch excited comment. He was Prince Paul, brother of the king, and the seat assigned to him was an official announcement that Paul hereafter is to be regarded as the heir apparent to the throne of Greece.

Find Kick In Chocolates.

VICTORIA, B.C., March 26.—While American gentlemen are buying their refreshments in bottles at the Government liquor stores here during the summer tourist season their wives will be able to take theirs in the form of luscious brandy chocolates. "Chock full of brandy," big black chocolates have appeared in the windows of local shops and are being received with amazement and delight. Apparently no move is being made by the police to interfere with the sale of these delicacies so the summer tourists will be able to set them without trouble.

BONAR LAW MAY RETIRE

British Premier's Health Affected by Great Strain.

Unionists Are Expected to Return to Party Out of Wilderness—Allied Conference In London Completes Its Work, and Outlook for Peace With Turks Looks Very Bright.

LONDON, March 26.—There have been persistent reports in Unionist political circles here that Premier Bonar Law is going to retire very shortly on account of ill health. It is said the strain of the international situation has seriously affected the Prime Minister's health. Mr. Bonar Law was forced by poor health to retire as Government leader in the House of Commons during the Lloyd George regime.

There will probably be a reconstruction of the Ministry to include some of the former Unionist Ministers who went "into the wilderness with Lloyd George," when that Government fell.

The Allied conference on Turkey virtually completed its work Saturday, and it is now certain there will be another peace conference, lasting at least two months. Extensive concessions have been made Turkey on the economic clauses of the original treaty, and many Turkish demands have been conveniently passed over until the new conference meets, probably at Lausanne instead of Constantinople.

The Allied experts will meet this week to decide the form of their reply to Turkey. Although the tendency has been to yield wherever possible, two important Turkish demands were rejected as impossible.

The Allies decided Angora must pay the interest and principal of the Ottoman debt in pounds sterling instead of French francs, as the Turks wanted. The latter method would have reduced the debt two-thirds.

It was also decided the Allied powers will not sign the treaty with Turkey, until she has carried out all existing contracts and concessions granted nations of Allied countries. Turkey's right to deal directly with concession-seekers will be admitted after this is done.

Another decision retains the International Council for the Ottoman debt, which Turkey wished to abolish. This council controls debt payments, etc., and although the United States is not represented on it, American finance has always taken a deep interest in the council's work.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir Charles Harington, commander-in-chief of the Allied forces in the Constantinople area, on his arrival here told the Associated Press that the prospects of an early peace with the Turks were excellent, provided the Allies and the Kemalists show a reasonable spirit of moderation and accommodation.

BURGLARS USED BOMBS.

Tried to Destroy Warehouse After Robbing It.

HAMILTON, Ont., March 26.—Following a terrific explosion at the Hamilton Uniform Cap Co., King William street, fire occurred at three o'clock Sunday morning which completely destroyed contents and building at a loss estimated by the owners at $125,000.

Scattered about the street some distance away were several rolls of cloth. It is thought the force of these to have been blown from the building in the explosion and A. Uger, president and general manager, declared that in his opinion burglars had entered the building prior to the blaze. He claims that after ransacking the place and removing all the valuable material they escaped, but left a time bomb to wreck the building. The cloth he is satisfied was the material they carried

The broker was striving to pull himself together.

"But Why on Earth Didn't You Have Them Use Your Own Picture?"

. . . if they're as clever as . . . oh!" He stopped short and his chin dropped. "Oh! Is that the answer?"

"Yes." said Hilliard, reclaiming the two photographs. "That's the answer. I didn't mind starting over again, only—" He sighed and inhaled mightily. "Only take my advice, Mr. Harmon, and don't lose your temper just before an operation."

Harmon breathed more freely, but he was still in violent intellectual distress. He round face was rapid with awe, and he was tonguing his lips in constant nervousness, for the complete possibility of the situation was creeping over him.

"If that's the case," he ventured, "why . . . they surely needn't recognize your name either, Mr. Hilliard, need they? I mean, if you had any idea of going back to your home town incognito, as it were—"

"They wouldn't recognize anything about me," said Hilliard dryly. His teeth, showing at the moment, were white and regular, as a young wolf's. "We won't discuss that side of it just now, though. But if I go back, I'm incognito—and don't make any mistake about it. Is that quite clear?"

Harmon swallowed again.

"They'd recognize your voice, wouldn't they?" . . .

"I had to get used to this one myself. Something went wrong with my vocal chords, and the antrum on both sides was hurt; it seemed to have an effect like changing a sounding-board."

"So! And you need to be fatter in the face, didn't you? How about your general size, and so on?"

"I've taken on twenty-five pounds; my face is a lot thinner, but there's a reason. It hasn't grown on me; it was manufactured. Incidentally, while I think of it my stride's shortened six inches. That's another identification gone. Bullet in my knee. I don't exactly limp, but—"

Harmon was beaming now, and finished with excitement.

"That's great. Oh! that's wonderful! Wonderful! Nobody'll know you from Adam! Thunder and lightning, what a chance—what a chance! Hold on—how well do you know the big men in Syracuse? Well enough to know what their weak points are? Well enough to know how to approach 'em? Know Cullen? Know the Durants? Know Embree and McEachern and Cooke? Know—"

"At one time," said Hilliard, with sudden tragedy in his eyes, "all those people you've just named were about the closest friends I had in the world."

"Well, if you've got nerve enough to try to pass yourself off as a stranger, why—"

"Just a moment!" The young man's gesture, although calm, was nevertheless commanding. "Now listen! I lived in Syracuse twenty-six years! If I ever had any friends there I've lost 'em now. I—"

"Whose fault was it?"

"Whose fault? Don't make me laugh! The point is that my friends and I aren't on speaking terms."

"Go ahead," said Harmon, satisfied. "Do they know you went to France?"

"They don't know anything. I left between two days. I've never written anybody so much as a line to tell where I was, or what I was doing. I went over on a tramp. A French lieutenant got me into the army, and I didn't give a d—n whether I got killed or not—and then I got this." His hand was on his cheek, where a long scar crossed it. "And for over a year I've been hoping that somehow, some time, I could get back at a few of those . . . principally Cullen and Durant and McEachern. Get back hard—you understand! Perhaps this suggestion of yours will give me the opening. Perhaps it will. That's what I'm wondering. I'm thinking it over. That's all."

Harmon controlled himself; his voice, when it came, was low and seductive.

"Well," he said, "could you get back any harder at . . . one who haven't treated you right than by going back up there and making good? By putting something over on 'em—something big, you understand—and making those fellows look cheap? That's better than using a club on 'em, isn't it? Coals of fire, man, coals of fire! Show 'em what you can do—and take your satisfaction in that. Don't fight your enemies—you don't have to! Make a profit out of 'em! And then . . . oh well, I don't care what you do after that—come out in the open and give 'em the ha-ha or not, just as you like. Could anything be a neater little comeback than that? More sort of Biblical and thorough? Poetic justice? Could it?"

Hilliard was still alert and rigid.

"There's a good selling argument? And something good to sell?"

"As straight as a shoestring, and as sure as you're a foot high. And if you can't do business on this basis, you couldn't sell gold eagles for a dollar apiece! That's flat!"

"So, I could go back—and honestly make good? All the way? Prove what I can do? And not have any backfire in it?"

"And have a chance," said Harmon, nodding, "to put yourself in right again. That's what my whole idea was. If you're going to cash in on your hard luck, boy, you've got to speak up. That's my policy! Cash in on this thing the doctors did for you! Let's play it together, son. If it's a sort of whitewashing you want, I'll help you. I don't care a continental what you did to get in wrong in Syracuse—it's success that counts. Nothing else but success. Is it a bargain?"

Hilliard shut his teeth tight; reflected; yielded abruptly.

"It's a bargain!" he said. "I'm with you!"

"Good! Now—"

"One moment! Let's be frank with each other. Don't get any impression that I've done anything that's—"

"Mr. Hilliard, you don't have to talk like that to me! I've had you sized up from the start, haven't I?"

"Yes, but I wanted you to know—"

"But I do know, son! Wild oats, sort of. Am I right, or am I wrong? That's why I'm banking on you. People turned up their noses, maybe. Said things. Gossip. I know that sort of business. And you're sore—naturally. Well, that'll soothe everybody, including yourself. Go on back to your old friends. You're a new man; they won't know you. Make 'em new friends—and there you are. Oh, here's another suggestion. What would you say to no salary at all, merely your commission, and no limit to your expense account? But you pay back half of your expenses out of your earned commissions. On—say, a three months' tryout. How does that strike you?"

"It . . . why, I don't see why you're driving at—"

"Because," said Harmon, "you're worth more than I thought you were. How do I know? I've watched your eyes, son! You're going into Syracuse with the finest plan, the finest front and the finest opportunity I've ever dreamed of in all my life! And besides that, you've got a spur that even I couldn't give you. . . . How are you fixed for money?"

"I'm not fixed at all. I'm broke."

Harmon fished for his bill-book, and folded two notes into a small compass.

"Here! Bind the bargain. Don't worry—it's an advance. I know who I can trust—that's my longest suit, son. Give me a receipt, if you like. Better not speak to me again until we land. Never know who's aboard that might see you later. Come to my office at ten o'clock the morning after we're docked. And—" He laughed in patent relief. "You know, son," he said, "I'm a pretty wise old bird, and there's not much that fools me, but . . . right up to the last second, I wasn't quite sure whether you'd take that job or not. If the surgeon that mended you could only have doctored your eyes, so—if he could only have doctored your eyes! Whew!" He stared again at Hilliard, and nodded soberly. "Wonderful—perfectly wonderful," he said, fascinated. "When you smile at me like that, I sort of feel as though I ought to get up and take off my hat and apologize to you, and I'm hanged if I know what for. . . . Perhaps they overdid it a trifle . . . copied that picture too well . . . why don't you see if you can't grow a mustache . . ."

CHAPTER III.

According to the railway schedule, the journey from New York should have taken about six hours; as a matter of fact, it took seven, and yet to Hilliard, who hadn't once left the observation platform, it was accomplished with the speed of a projectile. The dramatic value of his purpose had seized him, and partly on this account, and partly because he was going home, he was temporarily relieved of perceptive judgment, whether of time, space, or attendant circumstances.

"Now, whatever else you do, son," Harmon had adjured him, "stick to the story! First, last, and always—you stick to the story! It's your own business, in a way; and in another way, it's my business; but you keep your head clear and don't let anybody shake you on the facts, and we're both all right. Of course, you're starting out by lying—but it's a good lie. You're justified. As far's the rest of the world's concerned, you're a new man. You're born. Well, you've got a perfect right to be whatever you want to be. Nobody can prove you aren't what you say you are. Just remember these three things: One, capitalize your experience, and fill 'em full of war-talk—they'll love it; two, capitalize your position, and stick to your story—they'll swallow it whole, and never dream of the answer; three, capitalize your face, and smile, man, smile!" Here he had planted his hand between Hilliard's shoulder-blades with a thump which was meant to be fraternal and heartening. "And we'll both make good until the cows come home—and I think I hear 'em coming. Don't forget—they can't stop you! It's your second shot at life, and you've got the cards stacked the way you want 'em."

"The only thing," Hilliard had said, "is the . . . the story!"

"D—n it, Hilliard, what's the matter with you? Aren't you justified?"

"Y-e-e-s, but so much of it sounds unnecessary to me—every now and then. I wish we could have thought up something else, that's all."

"Well, did we?"

"No, but—"

"Then don't be a rank quitter! It was your own idea; and I say it's darned clever; stand up to it. You will, won't you?"

"Oh, I'll do that, Mr. Harmon. I've got to."

"Yes, you've got to. And just keep smiling, son; that's all. That's what I hired you for—start off smiling, and the battle's half won already. . . . That's it! Keep your nerve, son! . . . Good-by!" And here he had staggered Hilliard by another friendly buffet between the shoulder blades, and swung him cordially into the runway, and disappeared.

On the observation platform, Hilliard had ensconced himself behind a newspaper and a cigar, and tried to hold his emotions and his imagination in check. His purpose, now that it was crystallized, brought him no aftermath of shame for what he was about to do—he was conscience-stricken only in respect to what he had done already, long ago; and his nervousness was due merely to his fear that he might fail in his purpose.

After all, what was there to discourage him? He had worked out a system of campaign, as clear, as definite, and as inexorable as any field-marshal could ever hope to devise—and perfect. He was simply bringing home one vital principle of trench fighting—to rely on indirect fire. That was it—to fight! To fight for reputation lost, and to defend his new advantage gained. The end would amply justify the means; or if the end by any chance proved to be disastrous, why, there was another principle he must remember—no quarter given or asked.

"I'll teach 'em," he said unsmilingly to the blurred landscape. "I'll show 'em whether I can make good or not! Time! Time! That's all I want—time!"

At the depot, among the private cars and taxicabs a motor omnibus bore on its side the name of the newest hotel, which was his immediate objective; but for reasons which he couldn't have explained, he avoided it, and signaled to a taxi. As the car came to a standstill at the motor entrance to the hotel, he managed a great exercise of will-power to maintain his mood of arrogant conquest, and it was imperative for him to maintain it, inasmuch as his first ordeal was so soon to come. More than that, he had an ancient grudge against this hostelry, for it had successively declined to continue his credit, refused to honor his checks, and, toward the last, had politely suggested that he refresh himself somewhere else. One of his most galling memories was connected with this very entrance; his cheeks grew hot as he fought the vision down.

"Now!" said Hilliard, on the outer threshold.

He knew, from meticulous study and practice, the full effect of his manner, which was distinguished, patrician. He knew the almost irresistible magnetism which had befallen him by accident. He had been prepared—in his own imagination—for the battery of interest which was promptly trained upon him. And yet, as he pursued his luggage toward the desk, he faltered in his pride, he felt as though the scrofrowful eyes of all Syracuse were riveted upon him; the well-recalled surroundings unmanned him, and he was impelled to halt, lift up his hands in token of surrender, and to cry out: "This is not I! This is not I! It is the man I might have been—if you and I had understood each other!" So great was his anguish that in that moment he honestly believed that it was the equal fault of the city, and of himself, that he had gone forth discredited.

Behind the desk stood a clerk and—Hilliard's heart tripped—the manager who had tendered him the ultimatum. Hilliard's pen split a blot of ink on the register; his ears were tuned for the speech of recognition which would blast his dreams of triumph, and send him off again in multiplied disgrace.

"Yes, sir," said the clerk with extreme deference, "and about what price, sir?"

The manager, who had been scrutinizing Hilliard intently, whispered something to the clerk; the clerk bit his lip and looked up sharply; the prodigal winced, and stiffened. "Pshaw! C—ten dollars?" asked the clerk. "Very comfortable room, sir . . . Front!"

The manager, as Hilliard retreated, said impatiently to the clerk: "Front! He—he—ah—ah—Jimmy, anyway? Don't you know how to size up a man yet? Don't ask a man like that what he'll have—tell 'em what we've got!"

Upstairs, Hilliard went limp from the reaction. He had doubted that he knew—and this was proof of his lack of innocence. But the manager—who two years ago had called him by his first name—the manager had looked him full in the face, and made not the faintest sign of recognition!

It was in improved confidence, then, that he went down to dinner; and deliberately chose a central seat in the most popular of the three available rooms. He was actively eager to be observed; now that he had passed his first examination, he craved test after test; no inquisition could be too urgent for him. And at the nearest table sat a business man he knew, and a girl he knew; from their matter-of-fact attentiveness, he judged that they had been married during his absence; they gazed interminably at him, but only in admiration. He mentally checked off his list—that made a trio of old acquaintances who had come to know him. Facing him, a dozen feet away, sat a man who had been Hilliard's employer for an epochal six weeks—this man, too, was obviously satisfied, but unenlightened. Four! A dinner party, comprising six girls and six young men, filed gayly past him; every one of the twelve he had known well, some of them intimately; they looked down at him in passing, and, without exception, went on in ignorance. A tiny caseleaf of a girl was rather noticeably attracted to him; she spoke to her partner, who turned, and stared, and nodded in the bored fashion of any escort to whom a handsome stranger is pointed out; and Hilliard could have laughed aloud at the irony of the incident. They had known each other for a dozen years, that girl and Hilliard; in the dozen and first, her mother had forbidden him her house.

He dined with considerable leisure, and smoked a cigar almost to the end before he left the table. When he quitted the room, it was with practical assurance that his gravest fears were groundless, but for an additional precaution he read an evening paper in the lobby and endured in safety the inspection of a score of men who had known him well enough to refuse to loan him money.

At half-past eight, vastly heartened and refreshed, he equipped himself with certain documents from his suitcase, and called for a taxicab. The address he gave the driver was high on the eastern hills; during the last half mile, Hilliard was peering out at the shaded lights of houses where he had played in his earlier youth. The car stopped; Hilliard went up a stone-flagged walk, up broad stone steps, and stood on a huge veranda. He was calm, and yet his knees were disconcertingly unsteady; he was determined, and yet his heart was pumping in uneven beats; for the moment, his throat was dusty dry.

As he gained the level of the verandas, there was a stir of activity off to the right, and as erect, middle-aged man clambered out of a hammock, and came briskly forward. Back in the shadows Hilliard could detect the soft outlines of a white dress.

"Yes?" The middle-aged man was politely brusque.

"Is this . . . Mr. Cullen? Mr. James Cullen?"

"Yes sir!" The middle-aged man was very convincing about it. "Yes, sir. What can I do for you?"

Hilliard bowed stiffly from the hips —a touch of foreign courtesy which had its effect.

"If you're at leisure, Mr. Cullen, I should like very much to have a word with you. On—I think I may call it so—urgent private matters. My name is Hilliard. In brief, I've come up from New York today to bring you a letter from a young man named Richard Morgan."

"Morgan!" said the older man sharply, "Dick Morgan!" Back in the shadows there was a sudden rustle. "Where's he?"

"He's dead," said Hilliard. "He died in France." Mr. Cullen stood perfectly still, and Hilliard, watching him intently, was overcome by resentment at the knowledge that two years ago this man had held Hilliard's fate in his thick fingers.

"No!" said Mr. Cullen. "Of all things! Well, what d'you know about that! Dick Morgan dead!" There was surprise, but little poignancy in his tone. "Isn't that terrible! And over in France! . . . Angela, did you hear that?"

More rustling from the shadows, and a slim figure stepping out of them into the foreground; it was Angela Cullen, just over the brink of seventeen, exquisitely small and blonde, and profoundly agitated by the news. Hilliard bowed mechanically; he had remembered her as a vivid little hoyden. Queer, that his heart should skip a beat or two at beholding her now. But she had brought the first remembrance of untroubled days back to him, and the contrast hurt—abominably.

"Oh, dad!" she said with a quick intake of her breath. "Oh . . . dad!" And clung to him for refuge, staring the while with wide and fearful eyes at the tall stranger who had delivered the laconic message.

Cullen held her close, and cleared his throat. He was in the commonenough situation of a man who feels that he ought to be deeply moved, and that he is, and wonders why; and his transparent effort to be funereal was slightly overdone.

"It's a great shock to us—of course," he said, speaking slowly. "A great shock . . . Oh! Mr. Hilliard—my daughter. Well, I must say I am . . . Suppose we sit down and talk this over—"

Hilliard bowed again; Mr. Cullen, his arm encircling Angela, led the way to the hammock and its reinforcement of wicker chairs. The girl was seated; Hilliard coughed delicately, and after that, there was a brief silence. Gradually, the air was charged with constraint. Here he was, and there was Angela and Mr. Cullen—all of them a little older, all of them a great deal more repressed, but even so, here they were, these three, just as they had sat in the same place, on the same night, on summer evenings, when Dicky Morgan wasn't yet anathema, and when . . .

"This . . . this thing happened some time ago, did it? You were abroad yourself?"

"Yes, I was."

"I want to hear about Dick," said Angela in a dry little voice. "Please! And . . . and who are you, Mr. Hilliard?"

"Angela!" said her father, reproachfully, but Hilliard, coughing with great vehemence, felt a sudden rush of triumph which gave him confidence. It was the triumph of dramatic success; the consciousness that whatever might come next, he had unequivocally appeared before people who knew him best, and that they saw a stranger. He smiled, as a churchman smiles.

"All I pretend to be is a friend of Dick's, I—"

"Oh! A friend!" Cullen's intonation was curiously warped.

"Perhaps you'll understand better if I go back to the beginning. Shall I?"

Cullen mentioned him curtly-blanche, and Hilliard took a long breath, and began.

"Back in May, 1915," he said, "I went to England and then to France to arrange some government contracts for copper products. In France, I was stunned—as everyone by the backlash of the war. And like everyone else, I did what I could on the spot . . . I bought tobacco for the soldiers and all that sort of thing. It isn't a question of charity, once you see the circumstances—you simply look, and realize that the most you can do is so trivial in comparison with what there is to be done that you . . . well, you do all you can and wish to heaven it were ten thousand times more. And then you try to find out where your mite will do the most good, and it straightens out because there are so many places where they need everything you have and everything everybody else has. It so happened that a friend of mine was in one of the American surgical units at Neuilly. I couldn't spread my own little contributions over all the institutions that needed it—there wouldn't have been enough to notice, so naturally I spent most of my time and most of my money at Neuilly. The cases there are all severe. The men need more help than the average, and there was one ward in particular . . . I won't describe it to you, but the first time I set foot in it, I knew I'd found the place to take all I had to give. And it was there that I met this man Morgan." He paused a moment. "And Morgan needed me more than anyone else in the ward."

"Was he . . . hurt so badly?" The girl's voice was taut with feeling.

"Yes, badly," he said, "but that wasn't the point. He was alone. He was friendless. He was under the darkest cloud that ever man can live under. You know what it was, Mr. Cullen."

The older man nodded tardily.

"I have an idea," he conceded.

"Well, there he was—wounded, and marooned in France, and with a bad conscience. Perhaps you can understand why he got my sympathy."

"Poor Dick!" said Angela, barely above a whisper, and Hilliard, looking across at her, was stirred by vague intuitions which rendered him guiltily uncomfortable. It had simply never occurred to him in announcing the death of a man who had run away from Syracuse in disgrace, he might find pity and forgiveness waiting for expression. Was there still an opportunity for him to change his tactics, to admit that it was only the unregenerate soul and the outward countenance of Dicky Morgan that had perished, and to maintain that a new being, a penitent and resolute being, had arisen phoenixlike to make atonement for the wasted years that had been exuded by shrapnel fire from the Huns? And suppose he did so, what would they say? If public opinion were to model itself upon the sorrow of poor little Angela Cullen, was it not better to confess at once, to wipe the slate clean, and to begin afresh? Had he said so much that the pathway to truth was closed—or was a lie well stuck to better than the truth, half told?

Morals, which are nothing but negative virtues anyway, hang on trifles. Hilliard was tottering on the uttermost edge of decision—and Mr. Cullen flung the weight of an aimless charge against him, and settled the matter out of hand.

"He certainly had plenty to be sorry for," said Mr. Cullen.

"Oh, dad!" said Angela, with a quick intake of her breath.

IN NEW LINGERIE

Underthings Are Resplendent With Hand Work.

Dainty Garments Are Not Fussy Only the Touches That Make for Beauty.

Of all the pretty clothes that women wear, the underthings, these days, are perhaps the prettiest, observes a fashion writer in the New York Times. There is nothing in the least ornate about them, but they are resplendent with hand stitches. All of the little intricacies known to the hand of woman are hidden away somewhere on the underthings of the woman of today.

The dresses are so simple as to be almost trimmingless and they even do not require a great deal of handwork to make them notable in the present season. But some one has said that they are nothing without the proper foundation supplied underneath them.

Then there is this about the modern dress. It asks for so little in the way of underpinnings that those selfsame clothes can afford to be more elegant and more finely beautiful than they have been in the past when many and more were required to give the dress the proper setting.

All that women are wearing these days can be crammed into a nutshell. There are the bloomers and the chemise. If you are straight and svelt in line then that is the end of the business. Sometimes you add an underslip to make the thinness of a certain dress set perfectly, but then you usually remove the chemise and make that slip do double duty. As you grow rounder and your figure runs into more ample proportions, then, of course, a corset and a brassiere must be added, but that is all. Everything is fitted so well, and made so excellently that your costume needs not an added garment to make the last one take its place more smoothly. Everything has been studied and fitted and shaped and adjusted with infinite care, so that when it is in place it is right and all worry about its proper state of being has been removed from your shoulders.

Also when you regard yourself arrayed in these new underthings, you cannot help but have only admiration for your own appearance in the mirror. All extra fussiness has been eliminated from them as though by magic. Anything oppressively feminine—that is to their generation—has passed away and there is left only those womanly touches which make for beauty.

THE HAT STYLES IN PARIS

Brims Short at Back, Wide at Front; Velvet Headgear Is Conspicuous; Ostrich and Ribbon.

Brims short at the back and more or less wide at the front; inconspicuous crowns and trimmings which for the most part branch widely out across the back, seem at the present moment to sum up the trend in French millinery.

The velvet hat is playing a conspicuous role, always in color and usually trimmed with the same color, or a lighter tone.

Green remains the favored shade; but the new greens shown in millinery are verging more and more on the bright yellow or apple greens, than on the gray, almond or mignonette tones of the start of the season.

A certain revival of interest in purple in the deep amethyst shade has been noted in many of the newest hats, used in velvet and in felt; although green and brown are still by all odds the leading colors in millinery.

Although wide spreading wings, or bold trimmings across the back stand out as a conspicuous note in the trimmings, no hard and fast rule can be applied either to the kind or to the position of trimmings as a whole, these being variously placed at the side, at both sides, across the back or directly at the front.

Thus far ostrich feathers take precedence over all trimmings this season, both in fantasy forms and in the regulation ostrich plumes. Ribbon also is in good demand, used not only as a covering but also as trimming.

Lace in combination with panne velvet, or with plain velvet in one-color effects, is favorably spoken of and is extensively used in hats of the more dressy type.

The Russian turban is a bowl-shaped affair fitting closely to the hair and trimmed across the front with a high, chick roll of fabric. This same effect also is carried out in metal turbans for evening wear. Frequently the severe, hard lines of these shapes are softened by the use of a small plateau of lace, or of fine Brussels net, with embroidered border.—Dry Goods Economist.

DRESSES OF TWO MATERIALS

New Tops Made of Contrasting Fabric Serve to Modernize an Old-Fashioned Garment.

Often you have a dress, or even a suit, which is good so far as the skirt is concerned and old-fashioned with regard to the waist. It is an awfully good idea, then, to cut off the waist, and leave just a plain width of skirt. Then the idea is to supply an entirely new top out of some contrasting material.

For instance, we will say that the skirt material you have on hand is gray twill. You have a printed silk top of colors of gray and violet and cerise—all those tints mixed up together, which make the prints so fascinating. You can have a white wool crepe top and use little white Peter Pan collars and cuffs for the only decoration. You can have a gray chiffon top. You can have a dark blue silk crepe top. You can have a jade-green satin top. As you see, the combinations are innumerable and there is some way that will suit your taste exactly.

For the belt you just use a left-over piece of the old dress, fold it into a belt an inch or an inch and a half in width and tie it around your waist at the point that makes the best proportion for your own particular sort of figure.

DESIGNED FOR SPRING WEAR

This charming dress for southern and early spring wear is of oyster white heavy crepe, with side panels of accordion plaits. Henna colored ribbon is stitched on skirt and blouse in squares and is used to edge the cuffs. Broader grosgrain ribbon, also in henna, is slipped through mother-of-pearl slides to form a girdle. Worn with white kid gloves.

BREAKFAST FROCK OF CREPE

What could be more luxurious than to step from one's bath into this mellow peach crepe georgette breakfast frock, trimmed with the softest of ecru lace and French bibe ribbons?

KNITTED FROCKS FOR GIRLS

Novelty Weave and Unusual Color Blendings Promise to Be in Favor This Winter.

Knitted fabrics promise to be exceedingly good for little girls' winter frocks, and some of them show decided novelty in weave and unused color blendings. Naturally, for children's wear, some firmness of weave is necessary, and this need is met in a variety of new materials that have all the softness that could be desired, in combination with a certain sturdiness of texture. Many frocks developed in such materials are very simply trimmed with wool embroidery and wool cord; for the materials as often as not show some novelty of weave, or a stripe, or even a silk embroidered dot in contrasting color, so a great deal of trimming is neither appropriate nor necessary.—Dry Goods Economist.

Smartest Millinery.

One of the smart hats of the moment is the small, round turban of folded silk or fabric. It adheres strictly to the shape of the head and is usually of bright or figured material.

A Farmer's Boy Rises.

Balthasar Henry Meyer, chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States can be likened only to Hon. Frank B. Carvell, chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners of Canada, for power.

Mr. Meyer, or Hon. B. H. Meyer, as American would call him, did not come by way of politics to his present exalted position. He was a college professor, if you please. Before that he was the son of poor immigrants who let him go to school, teach school and take degrees until he had risen to fame as an economist in his native state of Wisconsin.

Chairman Meyer has risen to fame despite the fact that his name is associated with that of the much-derided Oshkosh, where he went to normal school. The farmer's boy taught country school and saved money from his meager salary so as to go to college. Nowadays it is not fashionable to let mere school teachers rise to chairs in the universities, but Meyer could not be kept down and when President Taft appointed him to the I. C. M. in 1910, he was full professor in the state university and head of the State Railway Commission of Wisconsin. And now the farmer boy is chairman.

GETTING RID OF WEEDS

Results of Co-operative Experiments on Ontario Farms.

Over Eighty Farmers Have Experimented—Rape for Perennial Sow Thistle and Twitch Grass—Eradication of Bladder Campion and Cow-Bell.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

In 1911 experiments were begun with the object of gathering data from which definite statements might be made regarding the best methods of controlling the various bad weeds of the Province. In this connection over eighty farmers have carried on successful experiments on their own farms under instructions sent from the Director at the O. A. C., Guelph. The weeds experimented with were Perennial Sow Thistle, Twitch Grass, Bladder Campion or Cow Bell, Wild Mustard, Ox-Eye Daisy, Field Bindweed, Wild Oats and Chess. In nearly every instance they cleaned the field experimented with, and demonstrated to their own satisfaction the effectiveness of the method tried.

As a result of the data gathered from these experiments it is now possible to recommend with confidence definite methods for the eradication of such weeds as Perennial Sow Thistle, Twitch Grass, Bladder Campion and Wild Mustard.

The Rape Method for the Control of Perennial Sow Thistle and Twitch Grass.

Cultivate the field until about the middle of June, running over it frequently with a cultivator so as to keep the tops down and thus weaken the "roots." A cultivator with broad points should be used, which will cut off the Sow Thistle or Twitch Grass below the surface of the ground and not break up the rootstocks too much. About the middle of June apply manure at the rate of about twenty tons per acre (twelve good loads). Cultivate the manure in thoroughly and with a double mould board plough slightly ridge up the land, making the ridges about twenty-six inches apart. On the ridges sow pasture rape (Dwarf Essex variety) at the rate of about one and a half pounds per acre. It is important that the right amount of rape be sown for if too little is sown the stand will not be thick enough to smother the weeds; and if, on the other hand, too much is sown the rape plants will be too crowded and now grow vigorously enough to keep ahead of the twitch grass or sow thistle. Sow the rape when the land is sufficiently moist to secure quick germination of the seed. If the rape is slow in starting the twitch grass or sow thistle may get a hold in the rows and thus necessitate hand cultivation. Cultivate the rape every week or ten days until it occupies all the ground and makes further cultivation impossible. If, when the rape is cut or pastured, any of the weeds remain, the field should be ridged up last thing in the fall and put in with another hoed crop the following year. This has never been found necessary when a good stand of rape has been secured.

Eradication of Bladder Campion or Cow Bell.

Badly infested fields should be ploughed deeply in the fall and then cultivated and cross-cultivated with a broad-shared cultivator in order to break up and weaken the underground rootstocks. In the spring this cultivation should be repeated frequently enough to prevent the plant making any top. Leave ground until it is time to put in a hoed crop, which must be kept thoroughly clean in order to be effective. A well cared for corn crop planted in hills so that it can be cultivated both ways has been found to give excellent results. Special attention must be given to hoeing out any bladder campion plants which may appear in the corn crop and which are not destroyed by cultivation. One fall and one spring's thorough cultivation followed by a well cared for hoed crop has been found to destroy practically all the bladder campion in a field except in exceptionally wet seasons.

Preventing Mustard Seeding In Cereal Crops.

Iron sulphate or Copperas can be successfully used to destroy mustard in standing grain without injury to the crop. A 20 per cent. solution should be applied. This can be prepared by dissolving 80 pounds of iron sulphate in forty gallons of water. Iron sulphate is dissolved quite readily in cold water. The solution should be strained through a cheese cloth, as it is put into the spray pump tank. This will remove dirt and small particles that are apt to clog the nozzles.

Apply on a calm clear day just as the first few plants in the fields show flowers. It is very important to spray early: if the plants are left too long the treatment is not nearly so effective. If a heavy rain comes within twenty-four hours after the solution is applied, it will be necessary to spray again.

How to Apply the Solution.

An ordinary hand pump barrel sprayer, such as is employed to spray fruit trees, may be used, or a potato sprayer can be rigged up to do this work. Many of the up-to-date sprayers have a special broadcast attachment for spraying weeds. These are excellent for large areas, as they cover a wide strip at each round. Care must be taken to see that every mustard plant is covered with the solution in the form of a fine spray. —J. E. Howitt, O.A.C., Guelph.

Scotsman Went One Better.

Humorists have a way of poking fun at Scotsmen, and Mr. Herman Finck, who is equally good at composing music and jokes, recently told this one.

A Yorkshireman went into a public house, ordered his drink, and while he drank it, chatted to the barmaid.

At the end of ten minutes he said, "Good afternoon," and started to walk out, but the barmaid called him back and wanted to know when he intended paying for the drink. He insisted that he had paid for it before he had it, and eventually the barmaid let him go.

On his way home he met a Scottish friend and told him all about it, whereupon the Scot went into the public-house, ordered his drink, drank it, and chatted to the barmaid for fifteen minutes, at the end of which he said, "Well, I'll be going now; how about my change?"

HOW TO AVOID RICKETS

A Nutritional Disease Affecting Young Animals.

Sometimes Called "Bullnose" and "Sunfire" — Caused Largely by Unfavorable Conditions—Prevention and Treatment—Get Rid of Chronic Runts.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

The occurrence of this disease in young animals seems to be largely caused by unfavorable conditions of life, inducing impaired nutrition of the body. In particular there appears to be a lack of bone development, due to a deficiency of lime salts and other bone-forming elements in the body. Lack of exercise and close confinement in damp quarters are predisposing influences and are a cause of the disease occasionally in foals and calves.

In pigs the disease occurs generally soon after weaning time and particularly in litters born during the late fall and winter months. At this time, improper feeding of the young pigs associated with exposure to inclement weather and close confinement in cold damp quarters combine in accentuating the tendency towards faulty nutrition and ill-health, which are forerunners of Rickets. The feeding of young pigs exclusively on corn and also keeping them exclusively on a sloppy diet of buttermilk is at times responsible. In some cases there appears to be an inherited tendency in litters, due possibly to errors in the management and feeding of the sow while pregnant, and after farrowing.

Symptoms.

In the case of calves and colts be coming affected with Rickets, they appear unthrifty and develop imperfectly. The bones of the legs become softened so that they gradually bend and become distorted, causing the animal to be bow-legged and enlarged at the joints, and otherwise unsightly shaped. They are prone to lie down a great deal of the time, and in walking they move stiffly. The backbone also becomes crooked in some cases. Young pigs frequently become affected and, at first, appear to thrive poorly and have an abnormal appetite. This causes in them a craving for dirt and to keep picking up and chewing pieces of stick and bones. They soon begin to develop abnormally and disproportionately, while remaining stunted in growth. They become pot bellied and the head enlarges, giving it a bulging appearance, with the snout deformed, hence the name "Bullnose" being used. They may also breathe with a snuffling sound, while the head remains large. The skin often becomes thickened and cracked and gets discolored with dirt, giving a black sooty appearance to white pigs. Sooner or later, the bones of the legs begin to bend and they become deformed. This causes the legs to become badly bowed and makes them walk very stiff and awkward. The joints become enlarged and the pigs lie down a great deal of the time and, on rising, they keep resting on their knees. The lower ends of the ribs also become enlarged and seem to bend inwards under the body. At times many of the rickety pigs become troubled with piles and prolapse of the rectum, causing it to protrude as a red tumor-like mass behind. Finally they become miserably wasted and thin and remain worthless stunted mortals of no value.

Prevention and Treatment.

To prevent the occurrence of Rickets, one of the chief essentials is maintaining a proper mode of living for the mother while pregnant and for the young during early life. This entails rational dieting according to their needs, combined with comfortable living quarters and a reasonable amount of regular exercise and outdoor life in fine weather. In the case of colts being raised artificially on cows' milk, it should be diluted with about one-third water and sweetened with a little sugar. In the case of pigs they must receive suitable diet after being weaned. They should not be fed exclusively on dry corn, nor on chopped oats composed largely of the hulls, nor entirely on buttermilk. In winter, young pigs should be given a clean, dry, warm, place to sleep in and the bedding should be changed daily. This is particularly essential in the case of late fall and winter litters. The diet should be suitably balanced and consist of a mixture of ground oats free from hulls, corn meal, ground barley and shorts with a little oil meal, chalk and charcoal added from time to time. The feed should be given mixed with milk or water as a thick slop. A little ground oil cake or bone meal and skim milk is also good. As the pigs increase in size the diet can be gradually changed. They should be allowed plenty of range and pasture in summer. When young pigs are noticed showing a tendency of developing Rickets, the progress of the disease can often be arrested and a complete recovery obtained, if taken in time, by changing and supplementing their diet with tonics. The diet should be arranged as already described, with the addition of some digester—tankage and some meal. To the drink can be added lime water and to the feed a tonic composed of sulphate of iron one part, bicarbonate of soda and charcoal four parts. These ingredients are mixed thoroughly together, and a spoonful of the mixture added to the feed allowance of each pig once or twice a day. In cases of pronounced Rickets in pigs, where they become chronic runts, they are not worth treating and could be got rid of.—C. D. Mcconvray, Principal, Ontario Veterinary College, Guelph.

This sow and the cow and the good laying hen have proved the financial salvation of men.

Living Costs In Britain.

LONDON, March 19.—The lowest figure in the cost of living which has been reached in this country since May, 1917, was that of last month, according to the Ministry of Labor. The official return for February, 1923, showed that the cost of living was seventy-six per cent. above the cost previous to the war, compared with seventy-seven per cent. in January, 1923.

TO EXPECTANT MOTHERS

A Letter from Mrs. Smith Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her

Trenton, Ont.—"I am writing to you in regard to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I would not be without it. I have taken it before each of my children was born and afterwards, and find it a great help. Before my first baby was born I had shortness of breath and ringing in my ears. I felt as if I would never pull through. One day a friend of my husband told him what the Vegetable Compound had done for his wife and advised him to take a bottle home for me. After the fourth bottle I was a different woman. I have four children now, and I always find the Vegetable Compound a great help as it seems to make confinement easier. I recommend it to my friends."—Mrs. Fred H. Smith, John St., Trenton, Ont.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an excellent medicine for expectant mothers, and should be taken during the entire period. It has a general effect to strengthen and tone up the entire system, so that it may work in every respect effectually as nature intended. Thousands of women testify to this fact. C

Canadianizing Canadians

1. The Ramparts—Amethyst Lake, Jasper National Park
2. Lord Byng of Vimy, Fording a Stream in Jasper National Park
3. Portland Canal on the Alaskan Coast—Scenic Seas of the North Pacific

"We have to-day travelled through the most glorious scenery it has ever been my privilege to witness."

In this simply-worded sentence, uttered during the course of a speech at Prince Rupert, the Duke of Devonshire, statesman, diplomat and traveller, paid tribute to Canada, of which he was then Governor-General. Like many of his predecessors he was no stranger to the beauties of nature in many parts of the world. Yet during his stay in this country he repeatedly extolled the fascination of Canadian scenery.

To-day Canadians are realizing that there are many wonderlands within the boundaries of their own country, as fair as anything that some of them have travelled over half the earth to see. That knowledge has given a great stimulus to their desire to know more about Canada by personal observation. Hence the growing appreciation of the educational value of travel intelligently planned and carried out. Many Canadians indeed plan their business trips so that they may be able to devote a little time to visiting beauty spots that lie in their course. Thus they find relaxation from the complexities and strain of modern business life.

It is in the summer months, however, that the minds of the majority of Canadians are turned to travel. The sea, the lake, the quiet streams, the mountains, the rolling plains and the great forests, all have their appeal to the seekers of recreation, health, and pleasure. Summer resorts and journeys full of charm and attractiveness are legion in their choice. But the trip of all trips, the one that is essential to the completion of knowledge by Canadians of Canada, is that across the Dominion to the Pacific coast. On the way lies Jasper National Park, a delectable stopover point, which is an historic as well as gorgeously beautiful area. David Thompson, explorer and scientist, struggled with relentless courage through this section of the country in 1810. In 1811 the Athabaska Pass through the Rockies was discovered, and about 1826 the Yellowhead Pass became known to the white man.

The men who led the way and blazed the trails through these passes, were fortunate if they made more than six or eight miles a day. Their discoveries opened a new route between the Pacific and Hudson Bay, over which, twice a year, dog sleigh and pack horse, made their way with goods and passengers. That was considered one of the marvellous feats of the time. To-day this same trip is wonder may be covered in a modern railway train at a speed of forty miles an hour, or may be viewed in leisurely fashion from roads and well defined trails, by those whose time permits of camping and exploring among surroundings whose ever-present beauties are a source of never-ending amazement and delight.

To the travellers who journey thence on the Pacific coast, with its charm of climate, scenic setting, and growing cities and towns, there is in prospect the finest water trip in the world. The 750 miles of ocean voyage from Prince Rupert to Vancouver and Victoria, or on to Seattle, is incomparable in its beauty. This trip is a fitting climax to the succession of gorgeous scenic pictures that can never be erased from the observant mind.

Nature has been lavishly kind to Canada. Her resources in natural wealth are beyond human computation. The greatest factors in the development of these are the railways. What they have done to develop the country in a material sense can never be adequately described. Now they are bringing not only Canadians, but tourists from all over the world into touch with the matchless natural wonder places of the Dominion. They are in a very large measure responsible for the awakening to the fact that a land can be rich in all that makes for a great agricultural and manufacturing nation, and yet be noted to the ends of the earth for its scenic delights. In these phases of development the Canadian National Railways System is active.

A trip across Canada, aside from the pleasure it gives, will prove to be of inestimable educational value.

There ain't no poor in Napanee,
Hard times have changed to good,
The ones that lacked a little
Wealth
Have died for want of wood.

Let's sell them wood, and "do"

It finds a job for some poor soul,
And our fuel is less than their's.

So Councilmen of Napanee,
If your reasonings none too good,
Just get your heads together
Then we'll have lots of "wood."

DEAR PEOPLE —

How's your winter's coal hanging out ? Ours is out altogether, but we are not buying much of this charity wood. Oh, no, we have faith, and hope yet to be spared enough sense to know a good thing when we see it. We try to buy economically, and at the same time do the fair thing.

Our Saviour said, "Go Feed the Flocks," so you'll pardon us for referring to the word (feed) - feed it mean (not fleece). Now people don't be offended at our little chat ; we want to keep you from getting the (blues), and remember one thing, "don't get your feet wet." We are still here and doing fine. A very quiet wedding took place at the home of the minister, Rev. C. W. DeMille, 222 Lauder Ave., Toronto, when Miss Mabel M. Grumbly, Toronto, was united to Charles D. Sills, Phm. B., son of M. A. Sills, Napanee.

Mr. Wright has purchased a business at Thamesford, and will be leaving Newburgh shortly. He and his family will be greatly missed in the church and social circles, where they have always taken a great interest.

Mr. Wesley Vanalstine is critically ill at his home on Centre street, and slight hopes are entertained for his recovery. Friday last he suffered a stroke of paralysis, which was followed in a couple of days by another one. At the time of going to press he was still unconscious.

On Friday evening, March 16th, the "Volunteer Workers" of the fourth concession Sunday School, presented their play "Safety First" to an appreciative audience in the Methodist hall, Wilton. The play, which was a farce comedy in three acts, was splendidly acted throughout, and the "Volunteer Workers" deserve great credit. Between the acts, the members of the Young People's Society, under whose auspices the play was given, gave choruses, solos, duets and instrumental trios, and were assisted by the Wilton male quartette.

The regular meeting of the Napanee Poultry Association was held in their club rooms over the Bank of Montreal, on Wednesday evening last, and was attended by a goodly number of the members. President Geo. Fralick occupied the chair and suggested that the lantern slides for the occasion should be shown immediately and the explanation to be read after. The suggestion was adopted and splendid slides on horticulture and poultry were shown, followed by the lecture. Secretary Metcalfe then called the roll, after which demonstrations on kinds of poultry, etc., were given.

A very interesting event took place at Shannonville on Monday, March 19th, when about 40 relatives and friends of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Houston gathered at their home to celebrate the 50th anniversary of their wedding day. On March 18th, 1873, Jas. Houston and Catherine Doxtater were united in marriage by Rev. Samuel Pickett, Methodist Episcopal minister of Shannonville. They immediately settled on a farm in the second concession of Tyendinaga, where they lived a quiet and useful life and made a success of farming by faithful hard work. Ten years ago they retired from the farm and removed to Shannonville, where they bought a little home in which they have resided till the present.

The Ontario Department of Highways has made a first-class move in determining to stop tree butchery along public roads. Not only is it the intention to beautify the highways, but to preserve the existing beauty in that trees will not be mutilated or sacrificed wherever it is possible to save them. No company, telephone, power or telegraph will be allowed to cut the trees without permission and only to remove branches which are entirely essential to transmission, will be given, and in any case only the minimum amount of tree pruning will be allowed, and such must be done under the supervision of the Department of Public Highways. In this connection various companies have entered heartily into co-operation with the department in that at present they are trying to clear their lines with as little mutilation of trees as possible.

A nation loves to honor its heroes, their glorious deeds are recounted, that their names may be remembered by posterity. As a christian nation Good Friday means everything to us. Should we forget that day on Calvary, when the Son of God offered His life as a sacrifice that men might enter into eternal life and light ? There are those who may not share our faith nor sympathize with our love for this day. Even those must recognize that He was the greatest man that ever blessed the earth with His presence. All gladly pay tribute to the sweet gospel of the gentle Christ, who gave the first impulse to the brotherhood of man, and the fatherhood of God. As a christian nation our civilization and institutions are built on christian ideals, and if this is so, our profession ought to find concrete expression. We are the beneficiaries of a heroism unequalled in the history of the world, and it would be a credit and a benefit if those precious hours of Good Friday were religiously observed throughout the land.
